

HOWITZERS ARE CHARMING HOSTS

Battery Has Friends at a Smoker and are Repaid by Excellent Post-Prandial Speeches.

The Howitzers had a delightful smoker last night. The members of the battery were out in full force and a number of members of the Howitzers' Association were also present. Among the latter were Major Robert Stiles, Captain E. Jeter Boshier, Colonel Percy Hawes, Major A. W. Garber, and others.

An excellent supper was served at 9:30. At the head of the table was Captain Myers and the members of the Association were grouped about him. With the old soldiers and the young soldiers had discussed the menu to the content of all portions of their anatomy, Captain Myers began to call for a talk from the guests of the battery. Major Stiles said he had been requested by Judge George L. Christian to express to the battery his regret at being unable to be present. Then Major Stiles spoke briefly, but delightfully, on his own account.

Charles responded gracefully when Captain Myers reached him. Major Garber acquitted himself handsomely, as did Captain Boshier, Captain Baptist, of the Seventeenth Regiment; Lieutenant Hobson, of the Blues, and others.

It was midnight when the happy company parted for the night, and all voted the reunion and rally as one of the most delightful they had ever attended.

JUSTICE JOHN'S COURT.

Small Crowd and Small Docket Before Him Yesterday.

Justice John's court presented a deserted appearance yesterday morning and it was easy to understand that a circus was in town. Nothing less than a first-class circus could have depopulated the court like that.

The docket was, also, small.

Edward Lewis paid $10 for beating Etta Telford.

Henry Clay, colored, is charged with abusing Mary Johnson. The case went over one day.

And that was all, with the exception of a large number of drunks.

AT THE ACADEMY.

A play built around the civil war is an old story; a comic opera with the same setting is rather extraordinary. General and Lieutenant, in blue and gray, have had their little speeches in this war play for all these many years, but in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," which was presented at the Academy last night, the soldier boys sing to the audience.

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" is a production that could seem to appeal especially to the South.

The girls are all southern types, and, bless them, how they did look in their hoop skirts. Each one of them required six or seven square feet of stage room. We should be devotedly to the fashion and the ladies, since ceased to obtain well nigh an impossibility.

From their waists up, the girls looked charming, but their balloon-like skirts, which would bob up in front, revealing petticoats in an alluring manner, were too much for the audience. For anything, the audience laughed for ten minutes before the novelty of the sight had worn itself out.

What southern audience could fail to become demonstrative when such aids as Dixie and Maryland, My Maryland, are being sung, to say nothing of the melodies which are familiar and dear to the hearts of every one in the Southland. These refrains merely creep in every now and then, and do not form the greater portion of the music of the opera, which is quite pretty. The old songs, however, are none the less.

In the second act, the curtain rises upon one of the prettiest scenes that has been put upon Academy stage in some time—a moonlight view of a bend in the Mississippi.

The company was entirely capable. Miss Florence Hayward is as bewitching a little woman as ever smiled at a Richmond audience from over the footlights of the Academy stage. Her smile is something as fetching and as winsome a bit of femininity as one would care to see. Mr. W. H. Thompson possesses a good voice, and made a most manly looking officer. Mr. Will Carlton doesn't sing as he did in the old days, but he was the most solidly looking man of them all, and it did one good to see him again.

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" will be sung to-day, matinee and evening.

Mr. Thomas B. Powell, of the engineer corps of the Chesapeake and Ohio, who has been in Huntington, W. Va., for the past four months, is visiting his mother in this city.
